The first examples of travel to the past appear early in the 19th century, but it was not until the publication of Mark Twain's A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court that we see a hero taking advantage of a combination of hindsight and advances in technology to build an empire in the past. Concentrating on travel to the past, this study details, both in Twain's seminal work and in its science fiction successors, the various roles played by the traveller to the past--nostalgic, tourist, imperialist, Oedipal hero and existential isolate--and attempts to relate these roles both to the rest of Twain's work and to the world-view of contemporary America.

Not illustrated. 1864 edition. Excerpt: ... A DISENCHANTMENT. And thou wast but a breathing May Embodied by delicious dreams, And drifted o'er my wandering way On fancy's swift and shining streams. Thine eyes were only violets, Thy lips but buds of crimson bloom, Thy hair, coiled sunshine--vain regrets! Thy soul, a brief perfume. And when the time of mists and chills Fell where the sweet wild roses grew, And took them from the shadowy hills, It took my lovely vision too; And when I came again to find The charm which used to fill the air, A sorrow struck me mute and blind--Thou wast not anywhere! Yet something met me in thy place, Something, they said, with looks like thine, With tresses full of golden grace And lips flush'd red with beauty's wine; A DISENCHANTMENT. With voice of silvery swells and falls And dreamy eyes still sweetly blue--But, then, the reptile's nature crawls Beneath the rainbow's hue. Woman, all things below, above, Look pale and drear and glimmering now, For I have loved thee with a love Whose passionate deeps such things as thou May never sound. And, with a moan, The chill'd tide of that love has rolled Above my heart, and made it stone, And oh, so cold, so cold! I saw thee by a magic lamp Whose warm and gorgeous blaze is gone, And o'er me shivers, gray and damp, The dimness of the real's dawn. Oh, I am like to one who stands Where late a vision smiled in air, And murmurs, with outstretching hands, "Where is my Angel--where?" A CHAIN FROM VENICE. She stretches dimpled arms of snow; A glad smile lights her baby eyes: My little beauty, would you know The story of your shining prize? It is a poet's golden thought Of you, that glitters like your hair, Of rich Venetian sunlight wrought Far in the South's enchanted air. Ah, if you stay from Heaven to learn The years...

The unique and powerful voice of an extraordinary nineteenth-century woman poet Sarah Morgan Bryan Piatt (1836-1919) now ranks as the most important American woman poet of the nineteenth century after Emily Dickinson. Published heavily in all the period's most prestigious journals, Piatt was widely celebrated by her peers as a gifted stylist in the genteel tradition. Palace-Burner, however, also reveals Piatt's other side: ironic, experimental, and pushing the limits of Victorian language, the sentimental female persona, and what women's poetry could say. Paula Bernat Bennett's astutely edited selection of Piatt's mature work--much of it never before collected--explains why her "deviant poetics" caused her peers such discomfort and why they remain such a fertile ground for study today.

The private and public writings in this volume reveal the early relationship between renowned Civil War diarist Sarah Morgan (1842-1909) and her future husband, Francis Warrington Dawson (1840-1889). Gathered here is a selection of their letters along with various articles that Morgan wrote anonymously for the Charleston News and Courier, which Dawson owned and edited. In January 1873 Morgan met Frank Dawson, an English expatriate, Confederate veteran, and newspaperman. By then Morgan had left her native Louisiana and was living near Columbia, South Carolina, with her younger brother, James Morris Morgan. When Sarah Morgan and Frank Dawson met, he was mourning the recent death of his first wife. She, in turn, was still grieving over her family's many wartime losses. The couple's relationship came to encompass both the personal and the professional. To free Morgan from an unhappy dependence on her brother, Dawson urged her to write professionally for his paper. During 1873 Morgan wrote more than seventy pieces on such topics as French and Spanish politics, race relations, the insanity plea, funerals, and fashion gossip---editorials that caused a sensation in Charleston. Only after attaining financial independence through her secret newspaper career did Morgan marry Frank Dawson, in 1874. Morgan's commentary gives us a candid portrayal of the way one southern woman viewed her postwar world---even as she struggled to find her place in it.
